BITMARI HEROES

For millennia Africa has been the silent birthing place for greatness. Mountainous ravines and never-ending grasslands have been replete with every variety of flora and fauna cascading from north to south in waves of abundance. Centered so majestically like a jewel on a ring, Africa's precise positioning has meant beautiful climates from the dawn of the earth and likely to its very end.

The earth and the sky cooperate in an eternal dance to bring forth growth and harvest beyond any other place on earth and Africa's people have always been there to cultivate this wealth sustaining civilizations for eons.

Man spread across the continent and the tribes of Africa prospered as they spread across the land; growing in number, culture, technology and power. Even in the southernmost quarters of Africa the enterprising and explorative hearts of Africans saw them expand beyond their shores and begin trade with people from distant regions. This birthed the first great kingdoms in the 9th century, testament of whom still stand today as the renowned Great Zimbabwe.

The Mupangubwe people inhabited the Great Zimbabwe site from about AD 1000 – 1550 and through the rich trade of Africa raised the proud Great Zimbabwe structure by the 15th century. The great empires spread across the country Their wealth rooted in small-scale industries such as iron smelting, textiles, gold and copper, along with agriculture trading with all men on equal and fair footing rooted in deep Ubuntu sensibilities.

Decades later the tyranny of greed imposed itself upon this fertile land and colonialism clawed its way into Africa. The proud kings and queens and their mighty kingdoms were pillaged along with the bounty of the great land. The invaders took all they could establishing themselves as the new order and subjugating Africa's children; however, the eternal spirit of greatness could not be reigned in and soon it showed itself with the face of revolution. Zimbabwe resisted the colonialists and in 1896 the war to take back the homeland began. The beauty, wealth, power, ingenuity, brilliance, genius never left Africa, it only waits to manifest in the hands of Africans. This is where our story begins.
